ALD WILL NOT REGISTER UNTIL POLITICAL PRISONERS ARE FREE

The Arakan League for Democracy (ALD), the Arakanese (Rakhine) political party which received the third-highest votes in Burma's 1990 elections, will not register again until all political prisoners are released from jails across the country according to U Aye Thar Aung, a senior member of the party. U Aye Thar Aung said that many political prisoners remained in jail and the party would only consider party registration when all political prisoners were freed. In meeting on 10 October attended by ALD members from 17 townships in the Arakan (Rakhine) State, party members showed their eagerness to re-register the party. However, he added that is necessary for the ALD to register in order to continue its political activities and it will do its best to serve Rakhine national interests.²¹

CHIN NATIONAL PARTY WELCOMES PEACE TALK PROCESS BETWEEN CHIN NATIONAL FRONT AND CHIN STATE GOVERNMENT

The Chin National Party (CNP) has welcomed peace talks between the Chin National Front (CNF) and the Chin State government scheduled to be held in January 2012 in the Chin State capital Hakha. A meeting of the central committee of CNP was held on 3 and 4 December, which welcomed the CNF's decision to enter negotiations with the state level peace committee. Following negotiations between the Burmese government and other ethnic armed groups (including the Chin National Front (CNF)) on 19 November, both sides initially agreed to meet in Hakha. The CNP was formed in 2010 and contested the Burmese general elections in Chin state and won nine constituencies.²²

ANALYSIS

The visit of Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheik Hasina has been welcomed by both sides, since relations between the two countries have been shadowed by the unresolved issue of the Rohingya refugees. The visit has also provided both governments an opportunity to further enhance their bilateral relations and as well as cooperation in sectors of mutual interest. Similarly, the signing of several agreements on cooperation between Burma and Belarus during the Belarusian Prime Minister's visit and can be seen as Nay Pyi Taw's expansion of ties beyond its immediate borders. While foreign dignitaries have been busy shuttling to Nay Pyi Taw, Burma on its part has also been engaged in dispatching its own emissaries abroad.

General Min Aung Hlaing's visit to China will have been aimed at providing reassurances to its northern neighbour and also to restore the special "Phaukphaw" relationship between the two countries after the President's decision on the Myitsone dam, which jeopardized the existing cordial relations. Furthermore, Burma's rapprochement with Washington has put Beijing in an awkward dilemma and has also given the Nay Pyi Taw government an alternative in which to balance its relationship with China. While attempting to promote change, Burma has opted to follow a dual-track policy - one of maintaining relations with China and the other of building trust with the United States. While relations with the US may allow Burma to shift its dependence on China, the harsh reality is that its geographic location (as well as demographics) will prove to be crucial in dealing with the two superpowers. How Burma balances this political dimension will surely be a test and challenge for President U Thein Sein during his term of office.
